GreenComp: Taking Green Skills One Step Further

Concept

Taking a cross-sectoral approach, this session seeks to boost a policy debate on the role of green skills to promote sustainable life-long learning. Reiterating the words of Ursula von der Leyen on the matter, this session aims to offer a short-lived platform to discuss the ways in which Europe can use this unprecedented opportunity (COVID-19 recovery phase) to transform and rebuild education structures and the economy towards more resilient futures.

Drawing on a wide range of expertise, this discussion will highlight and debate possible avenues for generic/transversal and occupation-specific green skills. In line with Action 6 of the European Skills Agenda, this session invites participants to reimagine the importance of green skills across sectors. It calls for a participatory co-created session that exemplifies civil society's initiative to lead and take action in the green transition.

On a policy level, this session advocates that GreenComp, alongside DigiComp and LifeComp, would be an indispensable addition to provide Europe with a green competence framework for a sustainable future.
